Telepractice Collaborative Venture

Supporting Children and Families Across Australia

Now more than ever children and families need support. Through COVID-19 there has been an increase in families experiencing a range of significant hardships, greatly reduced face-to-face supports and a spike in deteriorating mental health and domestic violence. Virtual services break down barriers and ensure families across Australia receive critical support.

This is why the Association of Children's Welfare Agencies (ACWA) has established the Non-Government Organisation (NGO) COVID-19 Venture. Karitane and the Parenting Research Centre (PRC) have been funded by the NSW Department of Communities & Justice and a group of leading NGO agencies to lead a collaboration that will advance Telepractice service delivery to provide effective support to families.

This collaboration will embed a structured approach to the adoption, adaptation, design and development of Telepractice solutions for children and families. Together, we will build capacity to deliver quality, consistent Telepractice services to children and families and create a virtual continuum of care and support for the sector.

Minister for Families, Communities and Disability Services The Hon. Gareth James Ward explains the critical importance of virtual services to support families and says the Venture is an outstanding example of collaboration across agencies.

"The development of the Telepractice Framework will help vulnerable and isolated families across NSW receive the parenting support they require to manage the challenges of COVID-19. The work is an excellent example of collaboration between Government and the non-government sector, to design and develop Telepractice solutions for families unable to access face to face services."

"What is incredible, is the fact that a number of programs now have state-wide reach with the use of virtual platforms. Services that were once only localised, are now able to reach people in different locations. This is a great example where the sector has come together rapidly to support each other to adapt to changing circumstances – all while continuing to provide high quality services to families most in need. We want to look at how we embed that flexibility and opportunity across a range of programs, and support the sector with good practice guides." Department of Communities and Justice, Deputy Secretary Simone Walker.

Leaders from the Telepractice Venture group share why they have committed to this project.

"ACWA is very pleased to be working with other agencies on this important collaborative initiative that will bring enormous benefits to the community." Steve Kinmond, ACWA CEO.

"Karitane is excited to be leading this collaboration of quality organisations where each partner is investing to ensure consistent, scalable virtual services are available to families. Karitane has been delivering digital services for the past three years and responding to the pandemic with a leading digital transformation. We are able to share our experience, training resources, collateral and blueprint materials to support the sector." Grainne O'Loughlin, Karitane CEO.

"There is great potential in the move to more digital methods of parenting support, but it's important this is done in a way that fosters quality and continuous improvement in the way practitioners deliver different supports." Annette Michaux, Director Policy and Practice Parenting Research Centre.

“As part of our COVID-19 support strategy we have been implementing new and innovative ways to regularly check-in with children and families and to minimise the feeling of isolation during these difficult times. Now more than ever tele-services are essential to keep our network of families, carers and partners connected which is why we are excited about this new partnership,” Jamie Hodgson, Executive Director Key Assets Australia.

“The Covid-19 pandemic has really underscored the need for quality online therapeutic services for families at risk, so that they can be supported to work through any difficulties they are having and keep children safe before the situation escalates and child protection services become involved. We are pleased to work with so many of our colleagues in the sector to develop and design online support programs to support children and families.” Jane French, Executive Director Children, Youth & Families, Life Without Barriers.

“Covid19 has shown that that we need to find new ways of working to ensure that we can keep up vital support for our communities. This is particularly important for our rural and regional communities where services are often thin on the ground. We have seen some great innovation so far in our sector, and Social Futures is delighted to be working on ways to develop and share best practice nationally.” Tony Davies, CEO Social Futures.

“The way we engage with our families has changed since the pandemic arrived. Participating in this project provides a great opportunity to work with a group of committed professional organisations to give our team members the tools they need to ensure their practice continues to be evidence based and family focused.” Wendy Field, The Smith Family, Head of Policy and Programs.

“Uniting is delighted to join this collaborative and its shared commitment to engaging with families and children through evidence-based Telepractice. Client needs and circumstances are at the heart of what Uniting does; changing our approach to adjust to the current environment and more is part of that. We look forward to building shared capability through knowledge, experiences, and innovative approaches to community services with other quality providers,” Sue Shilbury, Uniting Director of Children, Youth and Families.

“We're pleased to be taking part and supporting this initiative. With over 12,000 carer households in New South Wales (foster, kinship, guardian and adoptive), there are many families caring for vulnerable children and young people. Supporting these carer families, ensuring they access the right information, training, services and supports in locations or through technologies that are convenient to them, can make a difference to their lives and the lives of the children and young people in their care to thrive and reach their optimum.” Renee Carter, CEO, Adopt Change (My Forever Family NSW Program).

ABOUT NSW DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNITIES AND JUSTICE (DCJ)

The NSW Department of Communities and Justice (DCJ) has brought together Family and Community Services and Justice. The establishment of DCJ will enable us to better work together to support everyone's right to access justice and other help for families and to deliver services with a more unified and collaborative approach, with benefits for the whole community. Our purpose is to help create a safe, just, resilient and inclusive NSW in which everyone has the opportunity to realise their potential. We are accountable for seven of the NSW State Outcomes: safer communities; efficient and effective legal system; reduce reoffending; prepared for disasters and emergencies; active and inclusive communities; children and families thrive; and people have a safe and affordable place to live.

ABOUT THE ASSOCIATION OF CHILDREN'S WELFARE AGENCIES (ACWA)

ACWA is the peak body for the NSW child and family services sector. We work closely with our members, government and non-government agencies, and other peak bodies, to bring about effective systems reform that will achieve better outcomes for families, children and young people, particularly those who are most
